The Crucial Contributions of Women in Diplomacy

Rup Narayan Das

In recognition of the role of women in diplomacy and in order to emphasise the imperatives for greater representation and their participation in diplomacy at various levels, the United Nations has declared June 24 as "International Day of Women in Diplomacy". The resolution in this regard reiterates that the participation of women, on equal terms with men, at all levels of decision making, is essential to the achievement of sustainable development, peace and democracy. The resolution also draws attention to persistent under-representation of women in senior diplomatic positions, pinpoint the challenges that women in diplomacy face, and discuss barriers that still need to be removed. The resolution further notes that lack of parity in women's representation in foreign policy is, in fact, detrimental to peace.

Biologically, psychologically, and emotionally, women are different from men. The very instinct of child bearing and child rearing, enables them to be more caring, sensitive, and understanding of human misery and suffering. Historically, women and children have been the worst sufferers in war and conflict. They are the hapless victims of such man made tragedies of humongous proportions. What is happening in Ukraine and the Middle East today bears out this fact.

If a picture can tell a thousand words, the Pulitzer award winning photograph of the victim of the atom bomb attack in 1975- a girl running naked in the Saigon city, is a poignant reminder of nuclear holocaust, and, such tragedies continue to occur across the world. In India, in the Line of Control, innocent civilians including women and children, fall victims to terrorist attacks.

Various Facets of Diplomacy

The role of a diplomat encompasses various responsibilities. At its core, it involves advocating for and safeguarding the interests of one's country and its citizens. Additionally, diplomats engage in negotiations with other nations or multilateral organisations to pursue objectives assigned by the political leadership, whether it be the Prime Minister or the External Affairs Minister.

A diplomat can either be a member of the Civil Services or the Foreign Service in particular, or he or she can be a Member of Parliament, Minister, or Presiding Officer of the legislature or Parliament.

The dividing line between politics and diplomacy is wafer-thin. It would be appropriate to include successful women politicians in the category of diplomats. There exists a plethora of instances where women politicians have made significant contributions akin to statesmen and diplomats, championing justice and alleviating human suffering. Figures such as Ms Margaret Thatcher of the United Kingdom, Ms Golda Meir of Israel, and closer to South Asia, the late Indira Gandhi, Ms Sirimavo Bandaranaike of Sri Lanka, and Ms Sheikh Hasina of Bangladesh, have left indelible marks on human development. Notably, Ms Bandaranaike holds the distinction of being the world's first female Prime Minister. Furthermore, the efforts of former Taiwanese President Ms Tsai Ing-wen in combatting COVID-19 warrant acknowledgment. Likewise, the roles of US Vice-President Ms Kamala Harris, former Secretary of State Ms Hillary Clinton, and Ms Madam Albright, the

Mastering Soft Skills for Career Success

Vijay Prakash Srivastava

Despite their qualifications in fields like technology and management, many youth are deemed unemployable by industry and businesses due to lack of essential skills for professional success. Potential employers often seek candidates who possess not only academic credentials but also a set of skills that reflect their character. Many of these essential skills fall within the realm of soft skills.

In order to achieve results and thrive, we require resources, which encompass various elements, including skills. These skills can be categorised into hard skills and soft skills. Hard skills entail technical expertise or job-specific knowledge. For instance, for a civil engineer, hard skills entail comprehending different facets of civil engineering and implementing this knowledge in their work. Hard skills also encompass utilising technology, machinery, or mastering specific subjects like mathematics, programming, Soft skills essentially encompass personality traits that dictate your demeanour, behavior, and reactions to various situations. They can also be viewed as habits that shape how you work both independently and collaboratively, and how you foster relationships with individuals across different settings.

Employers worldwide are increasingly prioritising soft skills as the most desirable attributes in candidates. In contrast, hard skills or technical skills are quantifiable competencies easily evidenced through a candidate's qualifications and specific professional background. Soft skills, on the other hand, refer to intangible and non-technical abilities sought after by employers. The Collins English

VigyanJyoti: Encouraging Girls to take Science as a Rewarding Career

It is said, STEM (Science, Technology, Engineering, and Mathematics) disciplines have been male-dominated. Women are understood to be under-represented due to factors like societal norms, lack of exposure, and gender stereotypes. Recognising the need for collective efforts to address this imbalance, the Department of Science and Technology (DST) conceptualised the VigyanJyoti programme as a proactive measure to empower girls and bridge the gender gap in STEM education and careers.

Introduced with the aim to create level playing fields in Science and Technology, this pioneering initiative has been instrumental in breaking down

Inspiring Girls to Pursue STEM

One of the key components of the VigyanJyoti programme is early intervention and outreach through various awareness campaigns, workshops, and interactive sessions held in schools. By showcasing the real-world applications and opportunities in these streams, the VigyanJyoti programme eliminates myths and misconceptions, encouraging girls to consider STEM as a viable and rewarding career path. Moreover, the VigyanJyoti programme provides scholarships and additional academic support to enrolled female students and prepares them for higher education in STEM disciplines.

Mentorship by Experienced Professionals

In addition to financial support, the VigyanJyoti programme offers mentorship and guidance to enrolled girls through a network of experienced professionals in the STEM community. These mentors provide invaluable advice, encouragement, and career guidance to help girls navigate the challenges and opportunities in STEM fields. By fostering meaningful connections and mentorship, the programme nurtures a supportive ecosystem where young girls can thrive and succeed.

Another significant aspect of the VigyanJyoti programme is its emphasis on hands-on learning and practical exposure. Through internships, workshops, and industry visits, participating students get the opportunity to gain real-world experience and

What is the social impact of the VigyanJyoti initiative of DST?

The VigyanJyoti is a remarkable initiative of the Department of Science and Technology (DST) that aims to enhance participation of women in certain subject areas of STEM (Science, Technology, Engineering, and Mathematics) where their number is low. DST is making commendable efforts to revolutionise the women's participation in STEM through VigyanJyoti programme. This programme starts from Class IX and caters thousands of girls every year from almost 39% of the districts in the country and is actively contributing to the growth and development of girls for pursuing STEM education and careers by providing them with necessary resources and support. The programme is based on inclusive approach and thus also provides counselling to parents regarding girls' education and wonderful opportunities available in STEM fields. This initiative is a significant step towards bringing gender parity across the STEM fields and empowering women to achieve their full potential.

Please shed light on key milestones and achievements of this initiative.

VigyanJyoti programme started its journey from 50 districts, extending to 300 districts in 34 states/UTs as of date. The programme has its presence in 43 Aspirational Districts of India as well. More than 52,000 girls of Class IX to XII have benefitted in four phases (till March 31, 2024) and around 30,000 girls have been enrolled for Phase-V which will run through FY 2024-25.

What new dimension/s DST has added to the VigyanJyoti initiative to attract more girls to this unique programme?

Various year-round STEM activities are conducted under VigyanJyoti, with a special emphasis on technology-driven workshops such as coding, robotics, cybersecurity, etc.

What is the future roadmap of the initiative?

The Department of Science and Technology is actively working on expanding the programme to reach more districts across the country, aiming to extend its benefits to girls nationwide. Furthermore, efforts are underway to broaden the support provided by the VigyanJyoti programme, with a focus on empowering girls to pursue higher education in STEM fields at both the undergraduate and postgraduate levels in underrepresented areas of STEM.

equipping girls with the skills and opportunities they need to succeed, the programme has opened doors and shattered stereotypes, paving the way for a more inclusive and equitable future in science and technology.

VigyanJyoti programme stands as a shining example of the transformative power of quality education, guidance, nurturing and support.

The long-term goal of the VigyanJyoti programme is to bring gender parity across the STEM fields through hand holding and providing continuous support to the girls from school to college and then to pursue research and careers in under represented areas of STEM. By investing in young women's potential and removing barriers to entry in STEM fields, the programme will not only change individual lives but also enhance the STEM ecosystem by promoting diversity.

Mastering Soft Skills for Career Success

Dictionary defines "soft skills" as "desirable qualities for certain forms of employment that do not depend on acquired knowledge."

During the interview process, behavioural attributes emerge as the key differentiators among candidates, often proving to be the decisive factor for career progression. While technical and core subject skills are abundant among students, soft skills play a crucial role in making an individual employable and bridging the gap between employment expectations and academic knowledge.

Securing your ideal job requires more than just solid credentials like a degree and work experience. While these are undoubtedly important, it's ultimately your soft skills that will determine your employability and future advancement in your career.

Soft skills enhance your effectiveness within your chosen career, foster strong professional connections, and enable you to adeptly navigate the challenges that arise in the workplace. With challenges on the rise, it's crucial to consider equipping ourselves with soft skills, which will assist us in navigating these obstacles. Below, we outline some of the most sought-after soft skills.

Communication Skill: Communication is the backbone of social and organisational life. An excellent communicator conveys his/her ideas with clarity and effectiveness. Communication basically consists of two parts: verbal and non-verbal. Verbal communication relies on words and sentences, which may be spoken or written. We should be careful about what we are saying or writing, focusing on what we want to achieve through it. Non-verbal communication, popularly known as body language, also plays a significant role. We communicate through our body language, both independently and in conjunction with verbal communication. Our expressions and gestures should support what we want to convey through our words. To excel in communication, one must also be a good listener in order to correctly interpret what is being conveyed. There are two types of listening: active and passive. We need to be active listeners, understanding the difference between hearing and listening.

Persuasion: Persuasion means convincing people to agree with your idea and logic. To get what we want, in many cases you will need to persuade people. This may happen at home and at work. In an organisation, if the chairman wants a new policy to be implemented, she may have to convince the board members and others. In the same way, if an employee needs to go on a long leave, even though organisations policies permit such leave, the recommending/sanctioning authority may need to be persuaded to accept the request. To persuade people you have to think through their position, and be ready to answer their objections and offer your rebuttals. Persuasion requires a clear understanding of the issue at stake, justification behind the issue, the costs one may have to bear and also understanding about the one who is to be persuaded. A person who prefers face to face communication, need not be presented with a long written note in the first place.

Creativity: Many have a notion that creativity comes easily to particular set of people like painters, artists and poets etc. It is not true. Just as we know to communicate, all of us possess the trait of creativity at least to some extent. How we develop it depends upon our own efforts and the environment available to us. Creativity is finding new ways to doing and looking at things. It is very easy to follow the beaten and usual path. Challenges lie in exploring something new which is better may be in terms of utility, effectiveness, price and comfort. A creative person is open to possibilities, makes best use of available resources and is also able to create new resources. Organisations need creative people to help them progress, diversify, and prosper. By using your creativity positively you create advantage for others and derive satisfaction for yourself. You need to believe that you can be more creative than you are.

Adaptability: In life, we have to deal with both good and bad. Our expectation is that things will always be as per our wishes, but this doesn't happen in real life. It is very easy to see that in life some of the things are under our control and some are not. We should not waste our efforts on something which is beyond our control but we may always take steps to minimise the losses and mitigate risks. The ability to adopt to different circumstances starts with a mindset that is willing to adopt to changing circumstances. Change is a way of life and in many cases a direction to the progress. So it is important not to undermine the value of change. Wherever we feel that we're resistant to change, we need to reflect on the reasons for it and then see if there is need to reorient our thinking. Adaptability makes us mature and reduce our pain when we are in a difficult situation.

Agility: Agility is applicable to individuals, organisations and businesses. To some extent agility and adoption are related to each other. For individuals agility means being aware of how things are shaping around us, what are the changes taking place which have a bearing on us, our way of living and our aspirations. An agile person tries to see the bigger picture, solve the complexities and read between the lines to gather inputs which may have crucial outcomes. Being agile will keep you in dynamic mode to remain alert to every development which may have a positive or negative meaning for us. This way we can be in a better position to utilise the opportunities and deal with threats. Agile people make an agile organisation. Organisations which are agile are better positioned to thrive as business and regulatory environment keep changing and competition takes new form and shape.

Emotional Intelligence: We keep talking of intelligence as a generic term giving undue weightage to IQ which reflects in numerical ability and things like that. In many researches, it has been found that emotional intelligence is equally, if not more, responsible for a person's success. Emotional Intelligence first means being aware that your emotional responses can drive your behaviour and impact people in both positive and negative way. Emotional intelligence is the ability to recognise, manage and understand our own emotions as well as recognise, manage and influence the emotions of others. Emotional Intelligence will help you in giving proper feedback and accepting feedback in a positive way, resolving conflicts, motivate others and get motivated, improving relations and ultimately getting the desired results. We all know that mental intelligence can be sharpened, in the same way emotional intelligence can also be developed and nurtured. Few tools are: being observant of your behaviour, thinking before reacting regulating our emotions, being tolerant and empathetic and learning from people who demonstrate high measure of emotional intelligence.

Problem Solving: Problems are a part of life. Both individuals and organisations face it and find their way through these. Problem solving skills helps a person to find out why a problem exists, what can be the possible solutions and then choosing and implementing the best solution. This is not as simple as it sounds. Identifying the root cause of a problem require understanding and maturity. Sometimes the cause is not the one which appears from outside or superficially. If identification of problem is not proper, no solution can work. Also many problems which appear to be huge, can be dealt with not so big strategic interventions but the crux lies in finding out those interventions. Problem solving skills also require a person to be realistic in accepting that there is an issue, and not avoiding it. Then comes the matter of examining it and finding solutions. Organisations need people who are good in problem solving and make things easier for them.

Collaboration and Teamwork: Organisations are made of people who work in teams to achieve certain goals. Individual efforts matter but team efforts are no less important. A good employee is considered the one who is a good team player as it is believed that together everyone achieves more. A good team player is open to ideas, is trustworthy, committed to the goals of her team and organisation and is ready to make sacrifices to achieve the common good. He respects the diversity of personalities and opinions. Role clarity and goal clarity are also required in a team. One should be clear about her role, responsibilities and what is expected of her and also the milestones to be reached by the team and the organisation. Teamwork makes you enjoy your work, produce better results, helps you focus on what is important for you and rewards you with satisfaction.

Ways to Improve Your Soft Skills
Those who are serious in developing soft skills of a high order should make systematic and dedicated efforts towards it. First you need to realise why such skills are considered so significant and how these are going to create value for you. First, identify the skills you require most. You may need to work on more than one skill. It would be better if you take up one or two at a time and then move up to the next ones. Developing soft skills may require change in attitude. For example, if someone wants to become a good teamplayer, she may be required to come out of her self-centred nature and become more accommodating in the matter of opinion and work. Observation can teach you a lot. Look around yourself to find people who demonstrate the soft skills which are on your radar, to learn from them.

Be Ready To Highlight Your Soft Skills

The soft skills you've internalised need to be leveraged in your social and professional life. Of course these shall be reflected in your behaviour and the way you conduct yourself. But before that, your resume should have specific mention of soft skills which are likely to create positive difference at work. In the same way, during an interview your soft skills will be demonstrated in the way you respond while answering questions like 'tell us about yourself', and 'what are your strengths?' You may describe how you have invested in developing your soft skills and have used such skills in various situations. Putting more emphasis on the soft skills required for a particular role can be more beneficial.

The Crucial Contributions of Women in Diplomacy

pioneering woman to hold the position of US Secretary of State, along with former Speaker of the US House of Representatives, Ms Nancy Pelosi, are notable examples of women who have contributed to the diplomatic arena in distinctive ways.

Women's Stature in Indian Tradition and Spirituality

Throughout Indian civilisation, women have occupied exalted positions much before the term "diplomacy" was coined and came into vogue. Goddesses such as Durga and Kali are esteemed as champions of righteousness and symbols of justice and equity. It is noteworthy that the notion of women's empowerment finds embodiment in our deities, surpassing representations found in other religious traditions. For instance, Goddess Saraswati embodies knowledge, while Goddess Lakshmi symbolises wealth, elucidating the integral roles women play in the holistic and balanced development of humanity, as depicted in our scriptures. This represents a significant contribution of Hindu civilisation to the global discourse on women's empowerment, deserving wider acknowledgment, including in the western world. Furthermore, women exhibit a natural resilience and endurance in the face of adversity, a trait exemplified throughout our cultural narratives. Notably, in the narrative of Lord Rama's reign, while he epitomised good governance, his consort Sita made substantial contributions to the establishment of an ideal societal order, known as "Rama Rajya."

Some Eminent Woman Ministers and Presiding Officers

Numerous distinguished women in India have made substantial contributions to diplomacy and alleviating human suffering. Among them, the late Sushma Swaraj, former Minister of External Affairs, holds a prominent place in history for her notable achievements. Notably, her utilisation of 'twitter diplomacy' garnered international recognition, earning her a position among the 15 global thinkers by the prestigious Foreign Policy magazine in 2016. One such instance of her impactful use of social media was when she resolved the problems faced by thousands of Indian workers in Saudi Arabia facing food crisis due to job losses.

Additionally, in the realm of governance, the Indian Parliament has so far had at least three women as Presiding Officer, bearing testament to the fact that Indian women have contributed significantly in strengthening the institution. Noteworthy figures include Ms Meira Kumar, former Speaker of the Lok Sabha, Ms Najma Heptullah, former Deputy Chairman of the Rajya Sabha and Chairperson of the Inter-Parliamentary Union (IPU), and Ms Sumitra Mahajan, former Speaker of the Lok Sabha. Ms Kumar, drawing from her background as a former diplomat, infused new energy into parliamentary diplomacy. Smt Heptullah, during her extensive tenure as Deputy Chairman of the Rajya Sabha, not only championed India's interests within the IPU but also advocated for global causes pertaining to development and democracy, thereby enhancing India's standing on the international stage.

Smt Sumitra Mahajan, who was the speaker of Lok Sabha, not only led a number of goodwill parliamentary delegations abroad, but also hosted a number of visiting Parliamentary delegations visiting India; and participated effectively in multilateral parliamentary fora like the IPU and Commonwealth Parliamentary Association (CPA). She also organised a number of international events such as the South Asia Speaker's Summit on Achieving Sustainable Development Goals (SDGs) along with IPU in Indore in February 2017.

Women parliamentarians globally have made significant contributions to raising awareness about the Sustainable Development Goals (SDGs) and have actively advocated for the implementation of these objectives within their respective governments.

Notable Indian Female Career Diplomats

The Indian Foreign Service has nurtured a cadre of exceptional diplomats whose contributions resonate throughout the annals of diplomatic history. These diplomats have not only extended compassionate assistance to Indians facing adversity abroad but have also fearlessly and effectively advocated for India's interests on the global stage, including within the United Nations.

Among the distinguished figures within this cohort is Ms Chokila Iyer, who, as a member of the 1964 batch of the Indian Foreign Service, ascended to the prestigious position of Foreign Secretary, thereby reflecting India's commitment to meritocracy and gender equality. Similarly, Ms Nirupama Menon Rao stands out as India's first female Spokesperson of the Ministry of External Affairs and the first woman High Commissioner from India to Sri Lanka. Her subsequent tenure as Foreign Secretary (2009-2011) and Ambassador to the United Nations (2011-2013) further underscored the calibre of Indian women diplomats.

Ms Sujata Singh's tenure as Foreign Secretary (2013-2015) and her prior service as India's ambassador to Germany exemplify the continued advancement of women within India's diplomatic ranks. Notably, Indian women diplomats have made impactful interventions at the United Nations, such as Ms Arundhati Ghosh's resolute stance against the Comprehensive Test Ban Treaty in 1996, affirming India's principled position on nuclear disarmament.

Furthermore, Indian women diplomats have held pivotal ambassadorial roles in various countries, exemplified by Ms Meera Shankar's tenure as India's ambassador to the USA (2007-2011) and Ms Deepa Gopalan Wadhwa's service as India's ambassador to Japan. These examples, though not exhaustive, highlight the substantive contributions of Indian women diplomats to global diplomacy.

Moreover, women Foreign Service officers routinely lead key divisions within the Ministry of External Affairs and serve in various diplomatic missions worldwide, further underscoring India's commitment to fostering gender-inclusive leadership in its diplomatic endeavours.

In summary, it can be asserted that women, by virtue of their inherent cognitive tendencies, are well-suited for the field of diplomacy, possessing a nuanced understanding of human circumstances and women's concerns. Indian women, across diverse roles, have made substantial contributions to diplomacy, not only advancing India's interests but also furthering the broader objectives of democracy and development.

India's Strategic Gold Reserves Storage Approach

EN EXPLAINS

Gold, a prized asset for centuries, has long been a symbol of wealth and stability for nations. But why would a country choose to store some of this precious metal outside its borders? Historically, war and political instability posed significant threats to national security, prompting countries to store their gold reserves abroad as a protective measure. It has played a crucial role in the international monetary system for centuries, and storing reserves in major trading hubs facilitated quicker and easier international transactions.

Today's reasons are more nuanced. Political or economic turmoil at home can be offset by secure reserves abroad, allowing countries to access their reserves securely in the event of revolution or financial collapse. Additionally, diversifying gold reserves across various locations mitigates risks associated with natural disasters or security breaches, ensuring that a country's holdings remain secure.

Popular Gold Vaults in the World

The world's most coveted gold reserves find safe haven in meticulously chosen vaults around the globe. The U.S. Federal Reserve Bank of New York reigns supreme, housing a staggering 7,000 tons deep beneath Manhattan's bedrock. Its robust security measures and strategic location solidify its trust factor. Fort Knox in Kentucky, synonymous with security, utilises a multi-layered approach with armed guards, blast-resistant doors, and a remote location to safeguard a significant portion of the US gold. Across the Atlantic, the Bank of England's historic vaults, protected by cutting-edge technology and highly trained personnel, hold not just the UK's gold, but also that of other central banks. Finally, Switzerland's reputation for neutrality translates to secure vaults scattered throughout the country, discreetly safeguarding a substantial share of the world's gold reserves. These fortresses of fortune prioritise security, stability, and a long history of protecting some of the most valuable assets on earth.

India, a nation long enamoured with gold, has a fascinating and evolving approach to storing its vast gold reserves. The Reserve Bank of India's (RBI) decision on where to store its gold reserves is driven by a strategic balance of security, liquidity, and financial stability. Here's a glimpse into the context and rationale behind India's gold storage strategy.

Historically Outward Bound: In the early 1990s, India teetered on the brink of economic crisis. Its foreign exchange reserves were dangerously low, barely enough to cover a few weeks' worth of imports. To avoid defaulting on a massive foreign debt, the government explored creative solutions. However, RBI faced severe criticism in 1991 when it was forced to pledge part of its gold reserves as the country was undergoing a foreign exchange crisis.

Traditionally, India held a significant portion of its gold reserves abroad, primarily in vaults of the Bank of England and the Bank for International Settlements (BIS). This strategy stemmed from several factors:

- Market Access: Storing gold in established financial hubs like London offered convenient access to liquid gold markets. This facilitated easier trading and the potential use of gold reserves for international transactions.

- Risk Mitigation: Diversifying storage locations across continents offered a safety net. It minimised the risk of loss due to unforeseen events like natural disasters or political unrest in any single location.

A Shift Towards Homegrown Security: However, recent times have witnessed a strategic shift. In May 2024, the Reserve Bank of India (RBI) repatriated a significant amount of gold from the UK, marking the largest such transfer in decades. This move reflects a changing perspective:

- Cost Reduction: Storing gold abroad incurs storage and security fees. Bringing it home reduces these costs for the RBI.

- Economic Security: Recent global events, like the freezing of assets by Western nations, have raised concerns about the security of foreign-held reserves. Repatriating gold allows India greater control and potentially reduces such risks.

- Confidence in Domestic Security: The move might also indicate the RBI's growing confidence in India's domestic security infrastructure to safeguard its gold reserves effectively.

Why Does the RBI Keep Gold Reserves in Foreign Vaults?

There are two main reasons the RBI keeps some gold abroad:

- Trading Convenience: Think of foreign vaults like safety deposit boxes close to major gold markets. Having gold stored overseas allows the RBI to buy, sell, or trade gold easily when needed. It's like having some of your savings closer to the shops you frequent.

- Earning Extra: Gold isn't just sitting there! Even when stored abroad, the RBI can use certificates representing the gold to participate in financial deals and earn a small return.

Implications of RBI's Gold Transfer to India

The RBI's recent repatriation of 100 tonnes of gold from the UK vaults to India has sparked discussions about its potential impact. This move could signal a shift in strategy, impacting everything from global reserve diversification to India's domestic gold market. Let's delve into the implications of this transfer.

- Economic Signal: The move sends out a powerful message to the global markets about India's strong economic position and policies. It may be committed to the safety of its financial assets. This move reassures international investors and financial markets that RBI or India is serious about its assets and maintaining financial stability and protection from potential risks. It will also reflect India's intention to reduce dependence on foreign custodians, thereby reducing exposure to geopolitical risks and financial instabilities.

- Increased Security: Storing gold in India will enhance security by reducing the risks associated with keeping it in foreign countries. Keeping gold abroad carries risks such as geopolitical tensions, changes in international relations, and financial sanctions. If anything happens, there is a possibility of freezing the gold. RBI wants to bring the gold back to India to minimise the risk and ensure that the asset is held directly under national jurisdiction. Moreover, domestic storage of gold also eliminates the uncertainties associated with foreign vaults and custodians. After transferring gold to India, the gold is now subject to Indian laws and regulations.

- Increased Trust: The repatriation will increase trust among both domestic and international stakeholders. People may trade on gold deposited abroad, but this may be a relief news for the shareholder. Moreover, this increased trust may attract more foreign investment, which contributes to economic growth and stability.

Golden Resilience: How Gold Reserves Bolster Economies in Times of Trouble?

Throughout history, national gold reserves, stockpiles of the precious metal held by governments, play a crucial role in mitigating economic and financial difficulties, particularly during periods of crisis. Gold reserves act as a hedge against various threats, ultimately promoting economic stability and investor confidence.

One of the primary benefits of gold reserves is their ability to shield a nation's economy from the adverse effects of currency fluctuations. Unlike fiat currencies, whose value can be swayed by economic policies and market sentiment, gold possesses a certain intrinsic value. This relative stability allows countries to use their gold reserves to intervene in the foreign exchange market, buying their own currency when its value dips. This intervention helps stabilise exchange rates, fostering a more predictable environment for international trade and investment.

Furthermore, gold reserves serve as a powerful hedge against inflation. When inflation erodes the purchasing power of a currency, gold tends to appreciate in value. This characteristic makes it a valuable asset for governments. By selling some of their gold reserves during inflationary periods, they can inject liquidity into the economy and dampen the inflationary pressures. This helps maintain the value of the domestic currency and protects citizens' savings from being eroded.

Geopolitical risks can also wreak havoc on financial markets. In times of international tension or conflict, investors often flock to safe-haven assets like gold. As a result, the price of gold typically rises during these periods. Governments with substantial gold reserves can benefit from this dynamic by strategically selling some of their holdings at opportune moments. This not only generates income but also acts as a buffer against potential economic disruptions caused by geopolitical instability.

The presence of a healthy gold reserve fosters investor confidence, a critical ingredient for economic stability. Investors view countries with significant gold holdings as more secure and resilient. This confidence translates into increased investment in the nation's financial markets and businesses, ultimately promoting economic growth and job creation.

The Future of India's Golden Stash

Gold has long been an emotional issue for most Indians, particularly since the Chandra Shekhar government pledged the precious metal during the 1991 balance of payments crisis. While the recent repatriation is a significant development, India will likely continue with a diversified storage approach. This may involve a calculated balance between domestic and foreign vaults, ensuring a balance between accessibility, cost-effectiveness, and security. India's evolving gold storage strategy reflects its growing economic stature and its desire for greater control over its financial assets. As the global economic landscape continues to shift, India's approach to gold storage is likely to adapt accordingly.

BEST ENTRY FOR

ISSUE DATED 1-7 June 2024

Question: As we commemorate World Environment Day on June 5, focusing on inspiring and enabling nations to prioritise environmental care for a sustainable future, we invite you to share your insights: What, according to you, is the most overlooked environmental challenge in India?

Saumya Mittal, New Delhi

As the world celebrates Environment Day, it's essential to spotlight an often overlooked environmental concern in India: light pollution. While it may seem trivial compared to issues like air and water pollution, light pollution holds significant implications for both the environment and human health.

India's rapid urbanisation has led to a proliferation of artificial lighting, especially in metropolitan areas. However, excessive and poorly directed outdoor lighting not only disrupts ecosystems but also disturbs the natural rhythms of birds and animals. For instance, many species of birds and insects rely on natural light cues for navigation and mating rituals. Light pollution can disorient them, leading to altered migration patterns and population declines.

Moreover, the pervasive glow of artificial light at night affects human health by disrupting sleep patterns and circadian rhythms. Studies have linked exposure to artificial light at night with increased risks of obesity, diabetes, and even certain cancers.

Addressing light pollution requires a multi-faceted approach involving urban planning, public awareness campaigns, and technological innovation. Implementing policies to regulate outdoor lighting, promoting energy-efficient lighting solutions, and fostering community engagement can mitigate the adverse effects of light pollution while promoting sustainability and biodiversity.

This Environment Day, let's shine a light on this often overlooked issue and work towards creating a more balanced and harmonious relationship between human development and the natural world.
